

Hello Steve,

Just a few comments about your AudioSensibility power cables. Before I begin, I just want to get a few thoughts out in the open, as it were.

Over the MANY years that I have considered myself an audiophile, I have been aware of the importance of connections such as interconnects and speaker cable and I firmly believe that the correct choices in these key areas can bring audible rewards. However, I have never subscribed to the belief that power cables could have any significant benefit since it is not logical that power, which has travelled down ordinary home wiring, could be improved by the introduction of a 5 ft. cable at the end of the line.

Despite my skepticism, I agreed to evaluate your premier power cables in my home system, confident that I would not notice any difference. BOY, was I wrong and was I surprised. While I still do not understand the logic, there is NO DOUBT that my mono amps sound very significantly better in all aspects of their sound performance. More space and air, more dynamics and a greater solidity in the bass. I am not referring to miniscule improvements, but to VERY audible differences.

You have made me a believer. I would also like to comment on the appearance of the finished product (your power cables). They are superbly put together using the highest quality components and they look just great plugged into my amps.

Once again, congratulations on a fine product that certainly elevates performance.

Sincere Regards,

Ted S
Aug. 12, 2009